Apple Hiring Manager
Apple

Dear Hiring Manager:

After much research and seeing your open position on your website, I am excited to hear that you are looking for Business Operations Strategy Analysts. It would truly be an enriching opportunity to learn from the world's most innovative, and passionate company.

With my four years at UC Santa Cruz, I enjoyed learning many different languages before really honing in on database management and data modeling. Now reaching my second year as a Business Analyst at Leidos, I have been challenged far more than college ever did, but am very happy with the actionable insights and reporting dashboards that I have created for executives and customers.

With this open position of a Business Operations Strategy Analyst, I want to bring my skills as a Business Analyst to assist with enterprise data transformation, to change the way users view their information, and really bring it to life on dashboards, getting away from the "data-dump" mentality many folks have. Apple has been extremely appealing to me my entire life, but now that I can actually provide value to the company, bringing Big Data to impact data driven decision making and using it to tell a thorough story, I would love to work alongside incredibly talented peers, and the possibility to enrich my knowledge. With my father being a wireless engineer at Broadcom, I have been very intrigued with the concept of data analysis, applications, and security at a young age, and the level of possibilities it brings to the table in the tech world. Currently, as a Business Intelligence analyst at Leidos, I believe that Apple can push me past my comfort zone and into an environment that I can truly witness change in the world's top company.

By acquiring this job, I can bring youthful expertise in pioneering Power BI dashboarding, as well as great knowledge and use of products from the Oracle stack. I have really grown as a professional in my first two years at Leidos, studying up on ETL processes of an amazing intelligence company, and want to be able to apply myself in this role at Apple.

I truly hope to be a part of your Business Operations team to grow as an Analyst and to continue growing my skills in other areas that I can improve on.

If you have any questions at all, feel free to contact me at (858)-335-8915 or email me at makj1997@gmail.com. I look forward to hearing from you soon. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Junyan Mak
